Susan Johnson, Ph.D. is the Director of Health Promotion at the Medical University of South Carolina. She is also founder and CEO of Vimcity, LLC, a well-being consulting firm, and co-founder and director of the South Carolina Healthy Business Challenge. Prior to joining MUSC, Dr. Johnson held faculty appointments at Duke University, Charleston Southern University and the Citadel. In her current position, she provides leadership of a comprehensive and collaborative approach to promoting health to students, employees, patients, and the external community and holds a faculty appointment in the College of Health Professions. She received her undergraduate degree from the University of North Carolina, Charlotte, master's degree from The Citadel and Ph.D. from the University of South Carolina.

Dr. Johnson has a demonstrated ability to reach across sectors and population groups to facilitate coordinated actions among education, industry, and government. Among these efforts, her work to advance employee, student, patient, and community well-being has been impressive. Her legislative work at both the local and state level paved the way for state institutions to develop tobacco-free campuses, helped create a smoke-free medical district in Charleston, and guided businesses in South Carolina to create healthy workplaces. Through her work with MUSC and the South Carolina Healthy Business Challenge she continues to promote healthy environments in all sectors using resources that exist in each community.

Dr. Johnson dedicates her time and talents to community organizations and projects related to well-being, sustainability, and conservation. She currently serves on the board of trustees for the Bee Cause, the MUSC Arboretum, Lowcountry Land Trust and the South Carolina National Heritage Corridor. She also serves as an appointed member of Trident Technical College Hospitality, Tourism and Culinary Arts Advisory Board, Citadel School of Science and Mathematics Advisory Council, Lowcountry Land Trust Business Leadership Council, Carolinas Heat Health Coalition, Sustain SC Corporate Membership Network, City of Charleston Wellness Advisory Committee, Town of Mount Pleasant Green Commission and SC7 Expedition team.

Dr. Johnson has conducted numerous presentations and speaking engagements at the local, state, and national level. Her work has been recognized through multiple prevention awards and publications, including Smoke Free Lowcountry Coalition's Smoke Free Advocate of the Year, Charleston Regional Business Journal's Influential Women in Business and Healthcare Heroes, Prevention Partners Agent of Change and the Joseph P. Riley Health & Wellness Award. She is a graduate of the MUSC Advanced Leadership Program and the Sustainability Leadership Program, serves on the alumni committee for both programs and is a current Sustainability Fellow through the Shi Institute at Furman University and Sustain SC.

Dr. Johnson resides in Mount Pleasant with her two daughters and in her spare time she enjoys running, hiking, kayaking and travel.
